Clerk, U.S. Bankruptcy Court

Below is an Opinion of the Court.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

FOR THE DISTRICT OF OREGON

In Re:)	Bankruptcy Case

A CORPORATION SOLE, dba the)	MEMORANDUM OPINION RE ESTIMATION
ARCHDIOCESE OF PORTLAND IN OREGON,)	AND PLAN CONFIRMATION ISSUES
Debtor.)

The court held a hearing on February 14, 2006 on various motions and other matters preliminary to consideration of debtor Roman Catholic Archbishop of Portland's (debtor) chapter 11¹ plan of reorganization. Having read the submissions of the parties and heard oral argument, it appears that there are two major matters presented at this point in the confirmation process: issues relating to estimation of certain claims and the issue of whether debtor's plan could be confirmed as a matter of law in light of the fact that it categorically disallows punitive damages.

¹ Unless otherwise indicated, all chapter, section and rule references are to the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. §§ 101-1330, and to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, Rules 1001-9036.

2 1. Estimation and temporary allowance of claims

3 A. Unresolved present child sex abuse tort claims²

4 (i) Purpose of the estimation/temporary allowance

5 A bankruptcy claim may be estimated or temporarily allowed in an 6 estimated amount for a number of different purposes in a chapter 11 case.
7 Currently at issue in this case is estimation or temporary allowance of 8 claims for purposes of voting upon and resolving issues related to 9 confirmation of debtor's proposed plan of reorganization. The parties 10 disagree about whether the debtor also seeks estimation for purposes of 11 distribution on the claims.

12 Debtor says that it seeks estimation of all unresolved present child 13 sex abuse tort claims "for temporary allowance for purposes of voting and 14 confirmation" of debtor's chapter 11 plan. Debtor's Motion to Estimate 15 Unresolved Present Child Sex Abuse Tort Claims at 1. Various parties, 16 including the Tort Claimants Committee (TCC) and the Future Claims 17 Representative (FCR), object, arguing that debtor is actually seeking 18 estimation for purposes of distribution, which is beyond the jurisdiction 19 of this court.

20 Bankruptcy Code § 502 governs allowance of claims in a bankruptcy 21 case. Section 502(c) provides, as relevant, that the court shall 22

24 ² In its Motion to Estimate Unresolved Present Child Sex Abuse
25 Tort Claims, debtor defines "present child sex abuse tort claims" as "all 26 claims based upon allegations of child sex abuse listed in the Debtor's schedules or for which the holder thereof has timely filed his or her own individual Proof of Claim by April 29, 2005 (the 'Bar Date')." Debtor's Motion to Estimate Unresolved Present Child Sex Abuse Tort Claims at 1.

1 estimate "for purpose of allowance" "any contingent or unliquidated 2 claim, the fixing or liquidation of which, as the case may be, would 3 unduly delay the administration of the case[.]" § 502(c)(1). When 4 actual liquidation of claims would unduly delay administration of the 5 bankruptcy estate, estimation is mandatory. See, e.g., In re Bison
6 Resources, Inc., 230 B.R. 611, 618 (Bankr. N.D. Okla. 1999)(no estimation 7 required where liquidation would not unduly delay case administration); 8 In re Apex Oil Co., 107 B.R. 189 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1989)(same).

9 The bankruptcy court has core jurisdiction to estimate claims for 10 purposes of confirming a chapter 11 plan. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(B).
11 However, "the liquidation or estimation of contingent or unliquidated 12 personal injury tort or wrongful death claims against the estate for 13 purposes of distribution" in a bankruptcy case is a non-core proceeding.
14 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(B). Unless all parties consent, bankruptcy judges 15 may not finally determine non-core matters; those matters must be 16 determined by the federal district court. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(c).

17 Bankruptcy Rule 3018(a) allows the court to temporarily allow a 18 claim for purposes of voting on a reorganization plan.

19 Debtor claims that it seeks estimation only for purposes of voting 20 and confirmation of its plan; it argues that it does not seek estimation 21 for distribution purposes, which it recognizes would be beyond the 22 jurisdiction of this court.

23 The first question is whether the estimation of unresolved present 24 child sex abuse claims debtor seeks is in fact for purposes of 25 distribution rather than simply for purposes of voting and plan
26 confirmation. The answer requires a review of the provisions of debtor's

1 proposed plan of reorganization.

2 Debtor's proposed plan provides that debtor will form a corporation
3 to act as a claims resolution facility (CRF). Debtor's liability on all 4 present tort claims³ will be transferred to the CRF, and debtor will be 5 discharged from all liability for those claims.

6 Debtor will fund the CRF with an amount sufficient to pay in full 7 the amount of the unresolved present tort claims, as estimated by this 8 court. Actual liquidation of the claims will be through arbitration or 9 trial. Once claims are liquidated, there will be periodic payments in 10 full of the liquidated claims from the CRF. If the amount of the 11 estimated claims exceeds the actual amount of the claims as liquidated, 12 any excess funds in the CRF will be returned to debtor. The plan does 13 not provide for any additional payment into the CRF if the estimate turns 14 out to be too low. The CRF agreement does provide that, if funds are 15 insufficient for a full distribution on the liquidated claims, the 16 claimants will receive a pro rata share of whatever is left in the CRF.
17 This means that, if the estimate of the value of the claims turns out to 18 be too low, liquidated claims will not be paid in full, despite plan 19 language that requires payment of the claims in full. It also means that 20 the longer it takes a claimant to have his or her claim liquidated, the 21 higher the risk that the funds remaining in the CRF will be insufficient 22 to pay the liquidated claim in full.

24 ³ Debtor's estimation motion deals with unresolved present child 25 sex abuse claims, which are a subset of "present tort claims," which is a 26 defined term in debtor's proposed plan. Debtor proposes to transfer all liability on all present tort claims, including present child sex abuse claims, to the CRF.

1 In other words, debtor proposes to use the claim estimation process
2 to create a limited fund for payment of all present tort claims, 3 including child sex abuse claims, thereby limiting the liability debtor 4 will have on those claims.

5 Despite debtor's insistence that the estimation it seeks is for 6 confirmation and voting purposes only, I conclude that, in fact, the 7 estimation it seeks could also significantly affect distribution.

8 (ii) Procedure re estimation for purposes of limiting 9 distribution on present tort claims

10 Debtor is correct that the distribution to all of the tort claimants 11 will be based on actual liquidated amounts, not on the estimated amounts.
12 However, debtor's proposed plan provides that the estimation will provide 13 a cap on the amount of money that will be made available to pay the tort 14 claims. This effectively limits the amount that will be distributed, 15 thereby causing the estimation of the claims to be for distribution 16 purposes, not merely for voting and confirmation purposes.

17 Debtor argues that the cap on liability is a red herring, based on 18 its argument that the estimation methodology it proposes for present 19 child sex abuse claims is so accurate as to remove any risk of error.
20 According to debtor, the estimation of those claims based on prepetition 21 settlements will be a "highly accurate" reflection of what the actual 22 present child sex abuse claims will be, and therefore any assertion that 23 the amount transferred to the CRF will be inadequate to pay the claims in 24 full is speculative.

25 However, debtor acknowledges that none of the values of the 26 prepetition child sex abuse claims were based on trials, but only on

1 settlements. Although I do not question that counsel for the tort 2 claimants who settled those claims are highly skilled and fulfilled their 3 ethical duty of representation for their clients, it is important for 4 estimation purposes to consider the value of the child sex abuse claims 5 as determined by a jury as well as the settlement value of claims, where 6 the claimants have a right to jury trial. I do not find that debtor's 7 methodology of estimation would provide such a highly accurate indication 8 of the value of the claims as to make any concern about a cap on 9 liability "speculative."

10 Debtor's proposal to use estimation to cap the amount of the fund
11 available to pay all tort claimants is similar to that proposed in In re 12 Dow Corning Corp., 211 B.R. 545 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1997). In that case, 13 the debtor proposed to deposit into a trust a certain amount for payment 14 of pending personal injury claims. It sought estimation of the claims to 15 establish the feasibility of the plan. As in this case, Dow Corning's 16 strategy behind its request for "estimation of the aggregate value of 17 tort claims is to limit the amount it will ultimately have to pay on 18 account of tort liability." 211 B.R. at 566-67. The Michigan bankruptcy 19 court explained that Dow Corning "assumes that estimation will lead to a 20 discharge of all liability and that individual post-confirmation 21 liquidation can only be had against a trust fund established as part of a 22 plan of reorganization regardless of whether such liquidation proves that 23 the estimate was too low." Id. at 567.

24 In Dow Corning, the debtor's plan proposed to set aside funds to pay 25 settlements and litigation of personal injury claims, which funds it 26 believed would be sufficient to pay the claims in full. However, if the debtor's estimate turned out to be too low, the claims would have to share the fund pro rata, and any unpaid portion would be discharged.

The court said:

[A]llowing a bankruptcy judge to estimate the aggregate value of all claims for the apparently benign reason of determining feasibility of a plan of reorganization, when combined with the effects of 11 U.S.C. § 1141(d), can create the result that the estimation was actually for purposes of distribution as well.

Id. at 569. The court pointed out that the claimants had a right to a jury trial, and said that, "if estimation for plan confirmation purposes results in de facto estimation for distribution purposes via the effects of the plan of reorganization and the discharge provisions of § 1141(d), a claimant's right to a jury trial for purposes of liquidating her claim becomes hollow." Id.

Debtor here is attempting to do something similar to what Dow Corning tried to do. It wants this court to estimate in the aggregate the amounts of the present child sex abuse claims,⁴ for the purported purpose of confirmation and voting. In fact, it intends to use the estimation, along with estimation of other present tort claims, to put an upper limit on the amount it will pay on all of the tort claims, while discharging any actual liability in excess of the estimated amount. This court does not have jurisdiction to estimate personal injury tort claims for purposes of distribution, which is in effect what debtor asks this court to do.

Debtor argues that Dow Corning is distinguishable, because the court

⁴ Debtor seeks a different methodology for estimation of the present child sex abuse claims than for estimation of other present tort claims.

1 there did not have the prepetition settlement data that debtor has.
2 Further, debtor argues, in Dow Corning, the debtor's plan was ultimately 3 confirmed. See In re Dow Corning Corp., 244 B.R. 721 (Bankr. E.D. Mich.
4 1999), rev'd on other grounds, 255 B.R. 445 (E.D. Mich. 2000). My 5 determination that the estimation debtor seeks is for purposes of 6 distribution and therefore must be done by the district court, not the 7 bankruptcy court, is not based on the adequacy of the data for estimating 8 the claims. Also, the court's ultimate confirmation of a different, 9 jointly proposed chapter 11 plan in Dow Corning does not affect the Dow 10 Corning court's earlier holding on estimation for purposes of 11 distribution.

12 Because I conclude that the estimation debtor seeks is at least in 13 part for the purpose of distribution, I cannot make that estimation. If 14 debtor decides that it wants to proceed with a plan of reorganization 15 that depends on an aggregate estimation of present child sex abuse claims 16 for purposes of capping the fund from which tort claims will be paid, I 17 will at the appropriate time prepare a report and recommendation to the 18 district court.

19 In an effort to advance the confirmation process, I will comment on 20 some of the issues briefed by the parties regarding whether estimation 21 for distribution purposes should be recommended, and if so, what 22 methodology should be employed.

23 Estimation is required only if liquidation would unduly delay 24 administration of the bankruptcy estate. "Undue delay" is not defined in 25 the Bankruptcy Code. "[I]t is a problem 'whose solution ultimately rests 26 on the exercise of judicial discretion in light of the circumstances of

1 the case, particularly the probable duration of the liquidation process 2 as compared with the future uncertainty due to the contingency in 3 question.' 3 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 502.03, p. 502-73 (15th ed. 1991)."
4 In re Interco Inc., 137 B.R. 993, 997 (Bankr. E.D. Mo. 1992).

5 Both debtor and the TCC have filed plans of reorganization. Neither 6 plan provides a simple path to payment of all tort claims, including 7 child sex abuse claims, as they are allowed. Debtor's plan requires 8 estimation of all tort claims before confirmation and before a fund is 9 created to pay them. The fund is limited, and claims are paid in full as 10 they are allowed. This raises the possibility that tort claims that are 11 allowed early will be paid in full, while those allowed later will be 12 paid only partially or not paid at all.

13 The TCC's plan is conceptually simpler, but more complex to 14 implement. It creates a trust to pay claims and requires debtor to 15 transfer $42 million cash to the trust plus such additional amounts as 16 are necessary to pay claims, including punitive damages, once they are 17 liquidated. The trustee of this trust is granted a trust deed on all 18 debtor's real estate, including all churches and schools, which the 19 trustee may foreclose if debtor fails to make deposits as required. The 20 TCC's plan glosses over the facts that there are significant legal issues 21 pending regarding the extent of the property of the estate; it is likely 22 to take several years before the litigation over property of the estate
23 is resolved; and if the litigation is resolved adversely to the TCC's 24 position, there may not be enough money to pay all claims. Nonetheless, 25 the TCC's plan proposes to pay liquidated punitive damage claims before 26 all compensatory damage claims have been liquidated and paid. In a chapter 7 liquidation, nothing would be paid on punitive damages unless compensatory damages were paid in full. § 726(a).

If debtor pursues a plan that includes a cap on liability based on estimation of the tort claims, I may recommend to the district court that the amount of the present tort claims, including present child sex abuse claims, be estimated for purposes of considering debtor's plan. This case has been pending for more than nineteen months. Estimation would avoid undue delay in moving the case forward toward confirmation.

According to debtor's Motion to Estimate Unresolved Present Child Sex Abuse Tort Claims, there are approximately 129 unliquidated present child sex abuse claims in varying stages of liquidation. A significant number of those claims are at the very beginning of the process. Discovery in connection with the claims has been slow and complex, in part because most of the claims are decades old.

Estimation of claims will be useful under both proposed plans. Under either plan, the amount of the individual and total unliquidated claims will need to be estimated before there is any distribution, in order to assure that no claimant is paid more than his or her pro rata share of the available funds. With respect to calculating appropriate distributions under the TCC's plan, the universe of available funds will need to be limited to property of the estate. Given the unique issues presented in the property of the estate adversary proceeding, the potentially serious impact on church operations if churches, schools, or certain other assets are liquidated before the conclusion of the litigation (including all appeals), liquidation or use of assets that are the subject of the litigation may be stayed until final resolution of the 1 appeals.

2 I agree with the FCR that the type of proceeding necessary for 3 estimation varies depending on the purpose for which estimation is being 4 used. A claimant's right to a remedy for tortious behavior could be 5 substantially and irreversibly affected by the estimation, where 6 estimation is being used to establish a cap on the fund that will be 7 available to pay liquidated claims, and that fund could prove to be 8 inadequate if the estimate is too low. In that circumstance, due process 9 likely requires an individualized estimation of claims, as opposed to the 10 aggregate estimation process debtor proposes for present child sex abuse 11 claims, which divides the claims into a few groups and uses the same 12 estimated amount for each claim in the given group.

13 I do not agree with the TCC that this necessarily requires mini-14 trials for each claim. Before recommending a methodology to the district 15 court, I would explore with the parties methods for individualizing the 16 estimation process that would not require mini-trials for every claim but 17 that would address the lack of pertinent Oregon jury verdicts. For 18 example, one possibility would be for the court to appoint an expert 19 pursuant to FRE 706 who would (1) develop a matrix for both settlement 20 value and jury trial value of claims that is based on the relative 21 severity of the conduct, the extent of the damages, and the issues 22 affecting liability (such as the availability of witnesses and statute of 23 limitations issues), and (2) develop a form questionnaire that would have 24 to be completed by pertinent parties under penalty of perjury that could 25 be used to determine where on the matrix the claimant's claim fits.
26 Because of the purpose for which claims are being estimated, I would

1 likely recommend to the district court that estimation of the claims for 2 compensatory damages should err on the high side of the probable range, 3 to assure an adequate fund for payment of liquidated claims.

4 Another possibility would be to conduct a few advisory summary jury 5 trials such as are used in alternative dispute resolution, to obtain some 6 indication of how Oregon juries might evaluate these claims.

7 At this point, it is premature to choose a method of estimation.
8 That issue will be left to a time when the court and the parties can 9 explore the options.

10 (iii) Estimation for purposes of voting and plan confirmation

11 Debtor also seeks estimation of the present child sex abuse claims 12 for purposes of voting on the plan and plan confirmation issues under 13 § 1129. There does not seem to be opposition to estimation for voting 14 purposes. The TCC argues that these claims should not be estimated for 15 plan confirmation purposes, because debtor cannot show that liquidation 16 of the claims would unduly delay the administration of the case. The 17 TCC's argument is based on its view that the estate is solvent, so debtor 18 will be required to pay all claims in full, which requires liquidation.

19 I conclude that estimation of present tort claims, including the 20 present child sex abuse claims, is appropriate in order to avoid undue 21 delay in determining confirmation of debtor's plan. Liquidation of the 22 claims is not necessary for purposes of determining confirmation issues 23 under § 1129. Confirmation issues such as the best interests test 24 require a determination of the value of property of the estate and of the 25 claims against the estate. Requiring debtor to wait until all claims 26 were liquidated to obtain a determination of these types of confirmation

1 issues would be an undue delay.

2 The consequences of estimation for purposes of voting and 3 confirmation issues only are much less drastic than of estimation for 4 purposes of distribution. Therefore, I think the methodology to be used 5 for estimation could be different for these purposes. Because the 6 estimation of the claims of the claimants for these purposes will not 7 affect distribution, the concern about an erroneous estimation is much 8 less serious, and the procedure could be less exacting.

9 However, it makes no sense to engage in a dual system of estimation, 10 one in this court for voting and confirmation purposes and the other in 11 district court for distribution purposes. Because estimation in district 12 court will be necessary if debtor pursues a plan of reorganization that 13 uses estimation of claims to provide a cap on the amount it will make 14 available to pay tort claims, and in order to further judicial 15 efficiency, I will defer to the district court's estimation of the claims 16 for all purposes. If debtor revises its plan to eliminate the use of 17 estimation to cap distributions, debtor's proposed estimation methodology 18 may be satisfactory for purposes of estimation for purposes of voting and 19 § 1129 confirmation determinations.

20 (iv) Conclusion

21 Debtor has indicated that it intends to file a modified plan. A 22 further preliminary hearing on the motion to estimate will be set for a 23 date that falls after the deadline for the debtor to file its modified 24 plan, to determine whether debtor seeks district court estimation, to 25 discuss the exact methodology to be used, and to schedule the deadlines 26 for submissions and for further hearings.

1 B. Temporary allowance of claims

2 A number of claimants filed motions for temporary allowance of 3 claims for voting purposes, pursuant to Rule 3018. Those claims are 4 included in the group of present child sex abuse claims that I have 5 addressed with regard to debtor's motion to estimate. Therefore, I need 6 not consider those motions further.

7 C. Estimation of other claims

8 Debtor also filed a motion to estimate the claims of certain co-9 defendants (Order of Friar Servants of Mary, Redemptorist Society of 10 Oregon, St. Mary's Home, Mt. Angel Abbey, Franciscan Friars of 11 California, and Franciscan Friars of Oregon) at zero. I will take up 12 this motion at the evidentiary hearing set on debtor's motion to estimate 13 the present child sex abuse claims.

14 Debtor also filed a motion to estimate claims # 473, 474, and 475
15 (Nathan DuFresne, Paul DuFresne, and Deborah DuFresne) at $5,000 each.
16 Those claimants' complaint seeks damages for intentional infliction of 17 emotional distress, fraud, breach of contract, civil conspiracy, 18 negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty, arising from Nathan DuFresne's 19 attendance at and expulsion from St. Thomas More School. Although I 20 indicated at the hearing on this motion that I was inclined to include 21 Nathan DuFresne's claim with the group of unresolved present child sex 22 abuse claimants, based on my further review of the complaint and the 23 evidence submitted in support of and in opposition to the estimation 24 motion, I do not think that including his claim with the child sex abuse 25 claims is appropriate.

26 None of the claims are for damages arising from child sex abuse, nor

1 would any of the allegations of the complaint or the evidence submitted 2 to this court support a claim for child sex abuse. Therefore, it is 3 appropriate to consider the claims of these three claimants separately 4 from the child sex abuse claims.

5 The parties have submitted evidence and argument about the value of 6 these three claims. At the hearing, counsel for the DuFresnes agreed to 7 estimation of Paul and Deborah DuFresne's claims based on the evidentiary 8 record currently before this court. He did not agree to estimation of 9 Nathan DuFresne's claim based on that record. Therefore, estimation of 10 Nathan DuFresne's claim will be set for hearing at the same time as the 11 hearing on the estimation of the unresolved child sex abuse claims. The 12 procedure for that estimation will be as follows: the parties should 13 submit to the court no less than 14 days before the date of the hearing 14 declarations or affidavits setting forth any direct testimony.⁵ No less 15 than seven days before the date of the hearing, the parties shall advise 16 the court and opposing counsel whether they intend to cross-examine the 17 declarants.

18 Although the parties do not address the issue, it appears that the 19 claims of Paul and Deborah DuFresne include tort claims for which they 20 have a right to jury trial. Under debtor's proposed plan, the estimated 21 amount of present tort claims that would be used to cap the fund 22 available to pay present tort claims would include the estimated amount 23 of Mr. and Mrs. DuFresne's claims. Therefore, estimation of those claims 24

25 ⁵ Declarations submitted in connection with the present motion to 26 estimate shall be considered part of the record and need not be resubmitted.

1 presents the same issue as estimation of the present child sex abuse 2 claims, in that estimation is being used for distribution purposes. That 3 estimation must be done by the district court, and I should submit a 4 report and recommendation.

5 Because the parties have submitted evidence about estimation, I 6 conclude that I have sufficient information available to make a 7 recommendation about the value of these claims.⁶ Based on my review of 8 the evidence and taking into consideration the argument of the parties, I 9 would recommend that Paul and Deborah DuFresne's claims be estimated at 10 $10,000 each. Despite the DuFresnes' and their counsel's insistence that 11 the conduct of debtor, Father Johnston, and Mr. Murray was outrageous and 12 breached contracts and fiduciary duties, the actual evidence provides 13 little support for the claims. For example, the evidence claimants 14 provided does not show that defendants' conduct was "an extraordinary 15 transgression of the bounds of socially tolerable conduct," which is 16 necessary to establish a claim for intentional infliction of emotional 17 distress. See Sheets v. Knight, 308 Or. 220, 236 (1989)(setting out 18 elements for claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress).
19 Although the existence of a special relationship between the parties is 20 relevant in determining whether the alleged conduct is outrageous, 21 Rockhill v. Pollard, 259 Or. 54 (1971), the conduct of which there is 22 proof in this case is unlikely to support a finding of outrageous 23 conduct, even given the relationship between the parties as priest/school

24
25 ⁶ If debtor's modified plan does not include a cap on liability 26 based on estimation of tort claims, I will not need to make a report and recommendation to the district court, but instead can make the estimation myself.

1 official and parents of a student. Thus, the value to be placed on those 2 claims for purposes of voting and plan confirmation is much lower than 3 the amount they seek in damages.

4 2. Plan confirmation issues

5 A. Disallowance of punitive damages

6 The primary preliminary plan confirmation issue⁷ is whether debtor
7 can categorically disallow all punitive damages claims. Debtor's plan 8 provides that "[n]o Claims for punitive or exemplary damages will be 9 Allowed to any Claimant." Debtor's Plan of Reorganization ¶ 7.5.6.

10 The objecting parties argue that the plan cannot as a matter of law 11 categorically disallow punitive damages, based on the Supreme Court's 12 decisions in United States v. Noland, 517 U.S. 535 (1996), and United 13 States v. Reorganized CF&I Fabricators of Utah, Inc., 518 U.S. 213
14 (1996). In those cases, the Supreme Court held that a bankruptcy court

15
16 ⁷ There was also an issue as to whether debtor's plan could 17 properly treat consortium claims as cumulative of the claims of the 18 primary tort claimants, and provide that the consortium claims "shall be deemed released by the treatment afforded the Claims of the Primary Claimants under this Plan." Debtor's Plan of Reorganization ¶ 7.5.5.

19 "[A] claim for loss of consortium is based on injuries peculiar to 20 the plaintiff that were the consequence of tortious injury suffered by the plaintiff's spouse." Shoemaker v. Mgmt. Recruiters Int'l, Inc., 125 21 Or. App. 568, 572 (1993). Although in some states consortium claims are 22 derivative of the injured spouse, in Oregon, a cause of action for loss of consortium is "an independent action which stands on its own footing."
23 Wolff v. Du Puis, 233 Or. 317, 319, 320 (1963), overruled on other 24 grounds in Bahler v. Fletcher, 257 Or. 1 (1970); Shoemaker, 125 Or. App.
25 at 572. Debtor has agreed to change its plan provision regarding 26 consortium claims, apparently recognizing that there is no basis under the Bankruptcy Code for collapsing one person's loss of consortium claim into another person's claim for child sexual abuse, nor for categorically disallowing consortium claims. Therefore, I will not discuss consortium claims further.

1 cannot categorically equitably subordinate claims for postpetition
2 noncompensatory tax penalties (Noland), or for prepetition penalty claims
3 (CF&I). The problem, according to the Court, was that the bankruptcy 4 court's application of equitable subordination to the tax penalty claims 5 occurred "at the level of policy choice at which Congress itself operated 6 in drafting the Code." Noland, 517 U.S. at 543.

7 Debtor argues in its disclosure statement that disallowance of 8 punitive damages is appropriate for three reasons: (1) an allowance of 9 punitive damages would potentially result in the claimants receiving less 10 than full payment of their compensatory damages; (2) under Oregon law, 60 11 percent of punitive damages are paid to the state, not to claimants, so 12 there would be little economic benefit to claimants from allowing 13 punitive damages; and (3) debtor has already taken reasonable steps to 14 prevent further child abuse, so punitive damages would not serve as a 15 deterrent to future misconduct, and would raise First Amendment concerns.
16 Disclosure Statement Regarding Debtor's Plan of Reorganization at 29-30.
17 In its response to the objecting parties' arguments, it says that 18 punitive damages can be disallowed because (1) Oregon law does not 19 support punitive damages against debtor under the circumstances of this 20 case; (2) allowing punitive damages would potentially impair an equitable 21 distribution, would not be fair and equitable, and would frustrate the 22 goals of a chapter 11 reorganization, and (3) allowing punitive damages 23 would raise constitutional issues.

24 A creditor's entitlements under non-bankruptcy law are enforced in 25 bankruptcy, unless they are modified by some provision of the Bankruptcy 26 Code. In re A.G. Fin. Serv. Ctr., Inc., 395 F.3d 410, 413 (7th Cir.

1 2005)(citing Butner v. United States, 440 U.S. 48 (1979)). "Bankruptcy 2 courts lack authority to alter rules of state law, or depart from those 3 in the Code, to implement their own views of wise policy." Id. at 413-4 414. If a claimant can prove an entitlement to punitive damages under 5 state law, that entitlement cannot be affected by bankruptcy except as 6 allowed in the Bankruptcy Code.

7 Allowance of claims is governed by § 502(b), which provides that the 8 court shall allow a claim except as provided in that subsection. Nothing 9 in § 502(b) provides for disallowance of punitive damages. Therefore, 10 punitive damages may not be categorically disallowed under § 502.

11 Section 105(a) provides, in part, that "[t]he court may issue any 12 order, process, or judgment that is necessary or appropriate to carry out 13 the provisions of this title." The court's exercise of that equitable 14 power must be exercised within the confines of the Bankruptcy Code; it 15 cannot be used to vary the provisions of the Code. E.g., In re Saxman, 16 325 F.3d 1168, 1174-75 (9th Cir. 2003); In re Munoz, 287 B.R. 546, 552
17 n.5 (9th Cir. BAP 2002).

18 Nothing in chapter 11 deals specifically with punitive damages.
19 However, in order to meet the best interests test for confirmation set 20 out in § 1129(a)(7), the plan must provide that an impaired class receive 21 at least as much as the class would receive in a chapter 7 liquidation.
22 Debtor's plan classifies the tort claims, but excludes from 23 classification any claim for punitive damages, which claims will be 24 disallowed under the plan. Debtor's Plan of Reorganization at ¶¶ 6.4, 25 6.5. Thus, under the plan, claims for punitive damages would receive 26 nothing.

1 In a liquidation under chapter 7, however, punitive damages are 2 given fourth priority, and are paid before a debtor can retain any 3 portion of the estate. § 726(a)(4), (6). Thus, to the extent a debtor 4 would have a solvent chapter 7 estate that would have assets available to 5 pay punitive damages after other unsecured claims are paid, categorical 6 disallowance of punitive damages claims would violate the best interests 7 test.

8 I agree with Judge Easterbrook, who said that "the Supreme Court has 9 rejected the contention that tax penalties may be disfavored 10 categorically, strongly implying that case-by-case administration of the 11 Code's authority for equitable subordination is the right way to deal 12 with all punitive financial claims." A.G. Fin. Serv. Ctr., Inc., 395 13 F.3d at 414 (citation omitted). His conclusion was that, "if state law 14 allows punitive awards against insolvent parties, there is no federal bar 15 -- though whether a punitive award should be subordinated to other claims 16 is open to independent consideration under the terms of the Bankruptcy 17 Code." Id. So too with respect to punitive damages of a debtor whose 18 estate would be solvent in a chapter 7 case.⁸

19
20 ⁸ Debtor cites a number of cases for the proposition that courts 21 have recognized the power of the bankruptcy court to disallow punitive 22 damages in chapter 11. All but one of those cases are pre-Noland, and so 23 are of limited if any use. The one case cited that follows Noland is In 24 re Dow Corning Corp., 244 B.R. 721 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1999). In that 25 case, the court disallowed punitive damages because the evidence on the 26 best interests question established that punitive damages would not have been paid by a chapter 7 trustee. Therefore, the chapter 11 plan did not need to provide for punitive damages. The determination was very fact-specific, and so is not helpful where the debtor has not asserted that, in a chapter 7 liquidation, no funds would be available to pay punitive damages.

1 Debtor's arguments for disallowance do not withstand scrutiny.
2 First, there is no indication that allowance of punitive damages claims 3 must affect payment of the compensatory damages on the tort claims.
4 Given the different legal treatment of the two types of claims in chapter 5 7, there is no reason why the plan could not pay compensatory claims in 6 full before paying any punitive damages claims. It is the structure 7 debtor has chosen, not the law, that results in the possibility that 8 payment of punitive damages might result in payment of less than the full 9 amount of allowed compensatory damage claims.⁹

10 Second, although debtor makes its proposal so that it does not need 11 to obtain a determination of the extent of property of the estate, it 12 does not propose to compromise that dispute as part of its plan.
13 Debtor's proposal to pay no punitive damages is not premised on an 14 assertion that there would be insufficient assets available to pay such 15 damage claims in a chapter 7 case.

16 Further, the fact that 60 percent of any punitive damage award must 17 be paid to the state of Oregon, ORS 31.735(1)(b), does not support 18 disallowance of punitive damages across the board. Debtor argues that, 19 because claimants would receive only approximately 10 percent of any 20 punitive damage award (after payment to the state, to the claimant's 21 attorney, and taxes), there would be little or no economic benefit of 22 such damages to the claimants. The purpose of punitive damages is not to 23 provide an economic benefit to claimants, however; the purpose of 24 punitive damages is to deter and punish the wrong-doer. Honeywell v.

25
26 ⁹ The TCC's plan suffers from the same defect, as it requires payment of compensatory and punitive damages claims as allowed.

1 Sterling Furniture Co., 310 Or. 206, 210 (1990). Any economic benefit to 2 the claimants is not relevant to those purposes.

3 Debtor's constitutional argument is more difficult to understand.
4 It seems to argue that the requirement that a percentage of any punitive 5 damages award would be paid to the state of Oregon would result in 6 excessive entanglement of government with religion, in violation of the 7 First Amendment. It does not explain why that is so; presumably state 8 government may enforce its laws against religious institutions, including 9 possibly obtaining judgments against such institutions, without 10 necessarily becoming excessively entangled in religion.

11 Debtor further argues that there is some undefined constitutional 12 impediment to imposing punitive damages on religious institutions for 13 what it calls "historical acts." It does not explain, and I do not see, 14 what the constitutional issue is. If debtor establishes at trial that 15 any conduct supporting an award of punitive damages is purely historical 16 and has been remedied, it can make the argument to the jury and the trial 17 court that punitive damages are not required to deter future misconduct.
18 That is, however, a question for trial on the claims, not for plan 19 confirmation.

20 Debtor also argues that the liquidation of churches and religious 21 schools for the purpose of paying punitive damages would raise problems 22 under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA). This is not, of 23 course, a constitutional issue. In any event, the fact that schools and 24 churches might be sold to pay punitive damages creates no greater RFRA 25 issues than the liquidation of church and school property for purposes of 26 paying compensatory damages. Further, the determination of whether RFRA

1 would in fact be implicated by sale of Archdiocesan church and school
2 property is still pending, as set out in my ruling on the TCC's motions 3 for partial summary judgment in the property of the estate adversary 4 proceeding.

5 Debtor argues that it has taken all reasonable steps to prevent 6 further child abuse, and that imposition of punitive damages would punish 7 parishioners, who will end up funding the plan, rather than debtor.
8 Those arguments do not provide a legal basis under the Bankruptcy Code 9 for categorical disallowance of punitive damages; they are for the jury 10 that is determining punitive damages.¹⁰

11 Debtor next argues that punitive damages can be disallowed under 12 § 502(b)(1), which provides that a claim shall be allowed except to the 13 extent the "claim is unenforceable against the debtor and property of the 14 debtor, under any agreement or applicable law for a reason other than 15 because such claim is contingent or unmatured[.]" According to debtor, 16 punitive damages should be disallowed through the plan, because punitive 17 damages are not necessary to deter further misconduct or punish debtor, 18 punitive damages are not available on the claims asserted against debtor, 19 and imposition of punitive damages would raise constitutional questions.

20 Section 502(b)(1) makes available to a trustee "any defense to a 21 claim that might have been available to the debtor." 4 Lawrence P. King, 22 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 502.03[2][b] (15th ed. Rev. 2003). Plan 23 confirmation is not the time for the court to rule on disallowance of 24 individual claims under § 502(b); that determination should be made in

25
26 ¹⁰ The same arguments may be pertinent to estimation of punitive damages, if such estimation occurs.

1 the context of objections to claims. And, by statute, this court does 2 not have the authority to liquidate personal injury tort claims for 3 distribution purposes. 28 U.S.C. § 157(b)(2)(B).

4 Debtor next argues that punitive damages are not available for the 5 claims made against it by the tort claimants. First, it asserts that 6 there can be no punitive damages for the claims of negligent supervision.
7 Under Oregon law, punitive damages are not awardable for simple 8 negligence. Wilson v. Tobiassen, 97 Or. App. 527 (1989). Gross 9 negligence, however, may be sufficient to support an award of punitive 10 damages. Andor v. United Air Lines, 303 Or. 505 (1987). I do not have 11 sufficient information about the claims to know whether any of them 12 assert gross negligence.

13 Debtor also argues that there can be no award of punitive damages
14 against it under the theory of respondeat superior, because, under Oregon 15 law, a principal is liable for punitive damages for the acts of its 16 agents only if (1) the agents were acting within the scope of their 17 employment or, (2) if the agents were acting outside the scope of their 18 employment, the principal knew of and ratified the agent's misconduct.

19 Oregon law allows awards of punitive damages against employers held 20 vicariously liable for the intentional torts of their employees if (1)
21 the employee was acting within the scope of employment, Stroud v. Denny's 22 Restaurant, Inc., 271 Or. 430, 437 (1975), or (2) if the employee was not 23 acting within the scope of employment, the employer "was aware of, 24 approved of, ratified, or countenanced" the employee's misconduct.
25 Badger v. Paulson Inv. Co., Inc., 311 Or. 14, 28 (1991).

26 In Fearing v. Bucher, 328 Or. 367 (1999), the Oregon Supreme Court

1 recognized that a priest's sexual assault on a plaintiff was outside the 2 scope of the priest's employment. It held, however, that the employer, 3 the Archdiocese of Portland, could nonetheless be vicariously liable for 4 the priest's intentional act, "if acts that were within [the priest's] 5 scope of employment 'resulted in the acts which led to injury to [the] 6 plaintiff.'" 328 Or. at 374. The court concluded that a jury could find 7 that the acts of the priest in gaining the confidence of the plaintiff 8 and providing the opportunity for the sexual assault were motivated by a 9 desire to fulfill "his priestly duties" and so were within the scope of 10 his employment. Id. at 375. If the jury found that the priest's 11 "performance of his pastoral duties with respect to plaintiff and his 12 family were a necessary precursor to the sexual abuse and that the 13 assaults thus were a direct outgrowth of and were engendered by conduct 14 that was within the scope of [his] employment," the Archdiocese could be 15 held vicariously liable for the subsequent sexual assault. Id. at 377.

16 Under the law in this state, an employer can be held liable for 17 punitive damages if it knew of or ratified the employee's behavior, even 18 when that behavior was outside the scope of employment. Badger, 311 Or.
19 at 28. Because there are allegations in these tort claims that debtor 20 knew of the priests' behavior and did nothing to stop it, I cannot say 21 that punitive damages would be unavailable as a matter of law. It is a 22 matter that would have to go to the trier of fact.

23 Finally, debtor argues that, if punitive damages cannot be 24 disallowed in full, the court must estimate those damages for 25
26

1 confirmation purposes,¹¹ and for determining the amount that debtor must 2 pay into a fund to cover those damages. The same reasoning applies to 3 punitive damages as to compensatory damages: while this court can 4 estimate claims for purposes of confirmation and voting, it is not 5 appropriate for this court to estimate the claims for purposes of 6 limiting the fund available to pay those claims. If debtor makes such a 7 proposal, estimation will have to be referred to district court, after 8 the parties present evidence necessary to allow this court to make a 9 report and recommendation.

10 B. Absolute priority rule

11 The TCC argues that the plan is unconfirmable, because it does not 12 meet the absolute priority rule under the fair and equitable test of 13 § 1129(b)(2). Debtor responds that the absolute priority rule does not 14 apply, because debtor is a non-profit corporation, and the Archbishop 15 does not have an equity interest in debtor's property that he will 16 retain.

17 I will not resolve this issue at this time. Debtor's plan proposes 18 to pay all claims in full. If it does that, the absolute priority rule 19 will not be triggered. Further, the absolute priority rule will not 20 apply if creditors vote to accept the plan. The issue is one for 21 confirmation, and I will address application of the absolute priority 22

23 ¹¹ Nothing in this discussion should be construed as suggesting 24 that debtor could not propose to compromise the property of the estate 25 adversary proceeding as part of the plan of reorganization. If punitive 26 damages claims were subordinated and if the finite sum available was insufficient to pay punitive damages, issues relating to punitive damages might be moot.

1 rule if and when it becomes necessary to do so.

2 CONCLUSION

3 This court cannot estimate the unresolved tort claims, including 4 present child sex abuse claims, for purposes of establishing a cap on the 5 fund to be made available to pay those claims. If debtor pursues such 6 estimation, this court will make a report and recommendation to the 7 district court after further discussion with the parties about 8 methodology and considering appropriate evidence. If debtor does not 9 pursue estimation for purposes of capping liability, this court can 10 estimate the claims for purposes of voting and plan confirmation.

11 When and if the time comes to send claims estimation to the district 12 court, this court will recommend that the claims of Paul and Deborah 13 DuFresne be estimated at $10,000 each. If debtor decides not to pursue 14 district court estimation, debtor should submit an order for this court's 15 signature estimating these claims at $10,000 each.

16 As a matter of law, debtor cannot obtain confirmation of a plan that 17 categorically disallows punitive damages.
